Workers are fed up of bread and butter

When we show ourselves as a business group, whose main business area is engineering and construction, the question about what brings us closer to the arts and what our competitive advantage is, arises, but the answer is simple: "cultured workers generate more value in what they do" and "a company that does not value learning does not know its role in society and will have no future". Themes such as philosophy, science, literature, religion, meritocracy, and politics were explored in this report by Público by our Chairman, José Teixeira.

How to go from paper to reality

We were immensely honored to host Pritzker laureate Alejandro Aravena at a private conference of the series How to go from paper to reality, where he shared the creation process and challenges that led to the conclusion of the new EDP headquarters, a project we recently completed. We also learned about his social projects and the potential of public spaces for equitable redistribution.

Praise to silence

Pedro Abrunhosa returned to dstgroup to talk about a topic that is dear to him: silence. From the silence of words, actions, and especially songs, the artist praised silence, concluding with four songs played and sung live at our wonderful Memorial to Child Labor. A week after launching the podcast "É Preciso Ter Calma," which we support and which includes prominent personalities from Portuguese society.

7th Economy Week

We participated in the 7th Economy Week with two sessions full of distinguished guests. The first, supported by UMinho Exec, was dedicated to the theme of International Insecurity and Economy, and the second, together with IB-s, addressed the 'no longer so futuristic' vision of Construction: AI, Industrialization, and Sustainability. It closed out with a roundtable, moderated by Luís Reis, which brought John Fedden, Carlos Bausá Martínéz, and Nuno Capa together with Professor Eduardo Borges Pereira from the University of Minho.

A culture of construction, at dst it is possible

We opened our doors again to welcome almost two hundred enthusiasts interested in learning about our group, our culture, and our career opportunities, on a day full of sharing with thematic presentations, a guided tour of the campus, speed meetings, and a special closing by our chairman, José Teixeira.
