Joana Gama and Manuela Pimentel

At our Memorial to Child Labor spot, we received the beauty of Joana Gama's piano, in a unique afternoon that allowed the perfect symbiosis between music, nature and that which represents the group's lifeblood.

On the same day, and marked by the restlessness of April, by freedom, we ended the moment with a tribute to José Mário Branco by Manuela Pimentel, with the inauguration of the mural "Porquê, não sei".

libertar a liberdade: a story about April 25th

The Carnation Revolution has a long history before, during and after April 25th. We had the privilege of hosting José Pacheco Pereira who helped us walk the paths that led to the fall of the regime, told us about the ones he himself took and also about what happened afterwards. We also learned about his Ephemer project - Library and Archive, which contains important historical records.

camarim das estrelas

In the last episode of the first season, we spoke with Adriana Macedo, who leaves her role as interviewer to become the guest, closing-off this cycle. In the month in which we celebrate the 50th anniversary of April 25th, engaged in the world of law, she gives us a perspective on the evolution of women's rights over the years.

Breaking the silence on silence

D. José Manuel Garcia Cordeiro, Metropolitan Archbishop of Braga, spoke to us about silence, which together with singing and speech, represents one of the great symbolic dimensions of the liturgy, which leads to spirituality as a contemplative dimension of life. In the bustle of the present day, the possibility of churches being able to represent the welcome in the search for the silence that is needed for the language of meditation and depth.
